BAREFOOTED PROPRIETY.

A question of bare feet and knicker. bookers is agitating the school circles of Fitchburg, Mass. It was brought up by a female teacher who sent home a small, bare-legged boy on a hot day. She objected to the length of exposure between points where the boy left the ground and where his brief divided garment began. The boy's father made some stir over the matter, and the School Committee took it up.

Since then New England eloquence and New England primness have waged wordy war, and much seems destined to hang on the issue. A committeeman who had not forgotten the comfort of his own barefooted days argued, almost with tears. against the teacher's too severe ideas of propriety. He quoted with effect the words of the good old Quaker poet : I was once a barefoot boy.

But he didn't quite carry the day. The onestion went to the Visiting Committee. and pending their decision the boy goes into stockings. The case takes rank at once with that of the Brooklyn School Commissioner who not long ago proposed to revise Longrellow's "Launching of the Ship" in the interests of morality. The world holds its breath while great minds grapple with issues such as these.

DIRECTORS UNEABY UNDER FIRE.

The Railroad Directors who are on trial as a part of the endeavor to fix the responsibility for the Fourth Avenue Tunnel horror of Feb. 20th, do not enjoy their position in the court-room. It is much less pleasant than their ordinary gatherings, when they meet to talk business and divide profits. Lawyers ask awkward questions. There is too much of an inclination to intimate that there are burdens for even Directors to bear.

among these railway magnates the public may have gause to be grateful, even should the trial result in the exoneration of the indicted men. The prisoners at the bar will have learned that such a thing as their accountability is popularly believed to exist, and that they may be called upon at any time to face conve quences. This may convert them to new ideas of Directorates and their duties with regard to the travelling public and guished Postmaster-General, before providing private letter-boxes, made some public provision for the safety and reception of secondlass mail matter. At a rough estimate 500,000 women lay packages, papers, magazines and miscellaneous parcels on the mail boxes of New York, with nothing for a shelter from the storms and sneak thieves but the lamp-post. Many of these parcels are never collected. Hitched horses chew up some of them, street-cleaners sweep others into the sewer or dust cart, and mischlevous people make away with others. The public, the women portion of it, has a right to demand proper receptacles in which to deposit mail natter, the transportation and delivery of which has already been paid. New York can't do without private letter-boxes, but it can't do without ample mati boxes for the reception of gifts, books and other second-class
